A NATIONAL PERPLEXITY.

It would be difficult if not impossible to find in American history a parallel to the situation of the government consequent upon the declaration by the Supreme Court of the constitutionality of the Geary Chinese exclusion act. The position of affairs created by the cabinet while asserting in grieved surprise that they never expected that the act would be declared constitutional, is certainly not a dignified one but it is easily understood when the dilemma before them is considered. The enforcement of the act would involve the expenditure of several millions of dollars which Congress has not appropriated, it would involve peculiar hardships to Americans in China, and close our western seaports against the richest commerce of the Pacific. On the other hand to leave the law as a dead letter on the statute book is an alternative wholly unpleasant and objectionable.

It is worth noting that the intention of the law was not to secure the deportation of the Chinese now in this country, but to effectually prevent any further importations. The former law against the immigration of Coolies has been rendered ineffectual on account of the ease with which smuggling operations could be conducted across the borders, and the impossibility of recognizing illegal immigrants as soon as they were once safely within the limits of the United States. It was sought to obviate this difficulty by providing for the registration of all Chinese living here, and for the deportation of all found without the proper certificate. If the Chinese had accepted the law and registered themselves as required by its provisions the present difficulty would have been largely obviated, but acting under the advice of the Six Companies they refused to register and resolved to abide by the decision of the courts in regard to the constitutionality of the law.

Under the circumstances, that most [illegible] done is to make the best of a bad matter. No way has yet been suggested by which the Chinese can be sent back without money to pay their passages. The only way then seems to be to continue the policy in force since the 5th of May, when the law took effect, and temporarily to suspend its operations. When Congress meets it will have the opportunity to repeal the cruel and unjust law, or to provide the means for its enforcement. The Geary law was hurried through in order to meet the emergency of the supposed expiration of the Chinese restriction law then in force. Had it not been so hurried it is reasonable to suppose that it would not have passed in its present form. The coming Congress should rectify its worst features. As it stands it is a national disgrace.

THE KINGDOM OF NORWAY.

Yesterday was celebrated as a national holiday by two widely different peoples. The aristocratic and haughty Spaniards observed it as the seventeenth day of their bull fights, while to the simple and kindly Norwegians it recalled their declaration of national independence, being the seventy-ninth anniversary of that event. It was in 1814 that the royal line of Norway failed of male heirs and the daughter of the last king carried the crown to the Swedish line. With Sweden Norway entered into a union with Denmark in 1397, and when the union was broken at the beginning of the Sixteenth century Norway remained with Denmark. By the treaty of Kiel, January 14, 1814, Norway was ceded by the King of Denmark to the King of Sweden, but this transfer was not agreeable to the people of Norway who declared themselves independent, assembled a Constituent Assembly, adopted a constitution on May 17th, and elected the Danish Prince Christian as their king. No serious opposition, however was offered to the entrance of the Swedish troops to the country, and in August the convention of Moss declaring the union of the two countries on terms expressly securing Norway's independence was proclaimed. The following year the Swedish king was also elected king of Norway.

Although for the greater part of her history Norway has been nominally subject to foreign powers her people have been impatient of foreign domination, and of late years a strong national spirit has been manifested. The Norwegians as a people are much more enterprising than their Swedish neighbors and the country has a commerce out of all proportion to its size and population. The general celebration of the anniversary of its independence is another manifestation of the spirit which has led to the demand for a separate consular representation in foreign countries, and has caused parliamentary troubles of a somewhat serious nature within the past few months.

GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

Among recent deaths worthy of especial mention is that of General S. C. Armstrong, founder of the Hampton Institute. [illegible] The son of a veteran missionary, having been born in the Sandwich Islands. He came to this country at an early age, and his education and sentiment were thoroughly American. He served in the Union army with success as was attested by frequent promotions, and at the close became connected with the Freedmen's Bureau. In 1868 he founded the Hampton Institute, which was at first devoted entirely to the task of the education of Negro teachers. About ten years later Indians began to be admitted, and the present yearly attendance is about two hundred Indians and between two hundred and one thousand Negroes. It would be difficult to make an estimate upon the benefits of such a practical instrument of good, but it is certain that at his death General Armstrong merits the respect of his fellow countrymen and a generous [illegible] of his labors.

[illegible] of the Canadian Catholics has been reversed by a statement said to have been made by Mr. Gladstone recently that the Priests [illegible] favored the establishment. Such a step, however, would be a [illegible] Canadian Catholics should abandon its traditional theory of the complete separation of church and state and [illegible] to a policy ecclesiastical dictatory.

The [illegible] meeting of the Arkansas Valley Fair association is to be held at Rocky Ford on June 1 and 2, following the spring meetings at Albuquerque and Trinidad. An attractive racing programme has been arranged, and it is announced that first class competitors have been secured for the various purses. Quite a [illegible] to the host to be present and the success of the event is entirely probable.

[illegible] ment in Nicaragua seems to have captured the popular fancy, and President Zelaya is in a fair way to be driven from his exalted position. The affair has gained in importance by the falling into the hands of the insurgents of the Nicaraguan canal works. A United States man of war has been sent to protect American interests, which were somewhat endangered.

Nearly every day continues to bring news of the suspension of one or more Australian banks, and there is no sign that the crisis is near an end. The latest announcement concerns the Royal bank of Queensland. It is rather surprising that so many failures of such magnitude have not created more financial disturbance than they appear to have done.

Colorado has already begun to receive some benefit from the foreign visitors to the World's Fair, although the number is as yet small. No effort should be spared to increase the numbers, for on them this summer's prosperity of the State largely depends.

The first subject considered at the Woman's Congress was dress. No uncomplimentary allusion is intended. The subject is one of prime importance and merits consideration.

A Retreat to Capital Punishment.

It is remarkable that the punishment of death has been established by the people of the Canton Schaffhausen, by public vote, capital punishment. But brutal crimes increased to such an alarming extent that in 1868 this article was again removed from the Constitution. Thus it was, the Cantons were thereby given liberty to act for themselves in the matter. Since then capital punishment has been again introduced in Oberwalden, Uri, Appenzell, Valais, Zug, St. Gallen, Lorez and Schwyz, that is I say in the original Cantons, which are also Catholic. Now Schaffhausen follows suit, and it is very probable that shortly the death penalty will be declared in effect in every part of Switzerland. No other reason than the increase of atrocious crimes can be found for this.—Journal Des Debats, Paris.

Untimely Criticism.

Untimely criticism is a barrier, stunting and [illegible] from its [illegible] tendency. "Don't wriggle your feet so, my son," says the critical father to a boy vibrant with enthusiasm. The correction could have waited, and the boy, with dampened ardor, turns away, telling his next story elsewhere, while the father some day wonders why boys are sealed books to their elders. "Where did you say that dreadful crayon?" Mary says to John in the midst of his cheerful salutation, when he is just about to tell her of a bit of good fortune. "Such silly sentimentality!" says John, with a shrug of indifference, to Mary at some new thought springing out of her heart, dewy as freshness as a newly plucked rose. And John and Mary each grow to mourn the fact that the best of the other yields its fragrance elsewhere.

There are hundreds of old painters—the dealers, the [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] of certain artists, the [illegible] personal peculiarities.—Harper's Bazar.

Viking Ship En Route.

Twelve lately Norwegian sailors under an experienced navigator are now piloting across the Atlantic a reproduction of the Viking ship of old, the peculiar craft in which the warlike Norsemen gained naval renown. The vessel designed for exhibition at the World's fair, and will come to Chicago by way of the Erie canal and the lakes. She is an exact copy of an old ship literally unearthed in Norway, when an inquisitive native, being anxious to discover the contents of a mound, dug it up, and brought to light the resting hull of a Viking ship, with the armor-clad skeleton of its owner on the inside. The warrior had been buried with his weapons and the [illegible] Norse government has lent the particular ship made and the movement to send the ship to Chicago proved very popular in Norway.

A NOVELIST'S VIEWS.

MARION CRAWFORD'S OBSERVATIONS ABOUT AMERICA.

Changes in American Taste for Art and Better Architecture—American Hurry and Worry Is Imputed by a Lack of Traditions.

"What changes in this country have impressed me most since my last visit?" repeated Mr. F. Marion Crawford, the novelist, as he bent over his large trunk which he was packing for his departure homeward. "I have noticed so many changes that it is difficult for me to put my impressions in shape. When I came here 10 years ago, after long residence in Europe and in the east, I was most struck by the remarkable growth of the cities that I saw, but during my present visit I have been particularly impressed by the development in taste which I have noticed among the people here.

"It seems to me that my brother Americans—you know I am really an American myself, and a thoroughly loyal one in spite of the fact that circumstances have obliged me to spend most of my life abroad—have made a great advance in their knowledge and appreciation of the arts. This is shown most conspicuously in the architectural improvements in the various cities that I have visited.

"There are fewer monstrosities in the way of buildings now put up for instance, than there were a few years ago, and among the new ones there are some magnificent specimens of architecture. The interiors of the houses, too, show a similar improvement. Instead of using, [illegible] with brica-brac of inferior quality and poor etchings [illegible] at a fabulous price by unscrupulous collectors, I have found [illegible] evidences that furniture is displayed in their adornment. Where formerly the walls would be covered with many poor etchings, I have noticed a very few in the last trip.

"There too, I have noticed a marked change in the physical appearance of the people here. [illegible] to have developed and are now healthier and finer looking than they were when I last came. I have observed that the men carry themselves better, walk from the waist, so to speak. I attribute their improvement to the increase in games and physical exercise in general in this country. I presume that this increase is due in part to the fact that American men are now beginning to have a little leisure in which they can devote themselves to other pursuits than those of business.

"There is much to be hoped from the increase of leisure in this country. I have no doubt that in a few more years America will have a leisure class, just as each of the old European countries has. Indeed I have already seen signs of its formation. There are at the present time plenty of rich men in New York, who have no business and who spend most of their [illegible] and in sports, which are practically the only resources of the gentleman of leisure here.

"The business pressure in London is in my opinion far greater than in New York, and as for the social whirl New York doesn't compare with Rome. Roman society during the four months of the season is practically no slouch at all. In New York society is far more moderate.

"And this brings me to the subject of the conditions of American life. The most interesting of these conditions in my judgment is the absence [illegible] in the American [illegible] of any [illegible] that Americans [illegible] Europeans [illegible] traditions. They [illegible] these at a gulp, and the [illegible] is like that of taking a pill. Possibly America must make her own traditions, and she has not as yet had time to do this. The American people are still untrammeled, and can develop themselves in a natural and spontaneous manner. The complete absence of tradition here has struck me superficially and yet most forcibly and amusingly in American social customs.

"For example, I can't tell you what a strange sensation I have had when I have dined at luxurious American houses where all the appointments have been of the most magnificent description and where at table I have been confronted with the spectacle of a butler wearing a mustache. No one who has not been brought up abroad [illegible] the iron clad rules of society which prevail in European countries can understand the utter inconsistency of that butler's appearance. As a matter of fact, I don't care a rap about that sort of thing, but nevertheless I can't help being amused by it. The incident I mention [illegible] only one instance of a large number of incongruities that I have noticed in American society.

"The lack of tradition in America affects even the arts. Every other country has a long established tradition by which its whole artistic life is regulated, but America has [illegible] painting, sculpture and music. We have not thus far produced one great writer. Alongside Emerson, Hawthorne, Lowell and the little group of New England writers of 40 years ago did admirable work, but judged by the standards of Sophocles, Shakespeare, Dante, Goethe and Schiller they must be rated as second class men. Hawthorne was the greatest writer that we have ever produced, but he was only on the fringe of the first class.

"Every country—that is every ancient country—has had its great artistic era. As a rule it comes only once, though in the case of Rome, through the mingling of foreign blood, there was a renaissance, but this was only a conspicuous exception. Our era, is yet to come, possibly the next century is to produce it. At present America is remarkable chiefly for her great number of second class writers. We are doing work of magnificent mediocrity. The [illegible] of the future will perhaps stand upon our flaws."—New York Tribune.

A Simple Heat Engine.

An ingenious motor for the utilization of the heat rays of the sun or coal direct, thereby obviating the necessity for intervening mechanism of transformation, is said to be the first motor to obtain useful [illegible] sun. A large corrugated drum is filled with an expansible liquid or gas. Inside the drum are vanes, which, on being heated by the expansion of the fluid or gas communicate their motion to a pulley. On putting the apparatus near a fire or in the sun, where one side of only the drum is heated, or on applying a gas jet, varied expansion is caused inside the drum, and the pulley rotates forcibly.—Exchange.

A National Conclusion.

Mamma had been on a long journey with her niece, and while visiting in a Jersey town she contracted malaria and was quite ill on reaching home. Not long afterward her mamma had a chill. A lady hearing of it said: "Why, you ought not to have malaria living on such high ground." "Oh," spoke up Mabel, "I guess mamma inherits it from me."—Youth's Companion.

Educational Exhibit of the Fair.

The educational exhibit is well advanced and some things in it will bear close inspection. This is especially true of that of Pratt institute, of Brooklyn. This is an industrial school and the specimens of work in all the practical arts are excellent. They show what a pupil in school can be taught to do in architecture, building, plumbing, iron work, millinery, dressmaking, etc. The exhibit is presented with good taste.

The Quesckahl Indians.

Quesckahl Indians from British Columbia have taken up their abode at the exposition grounds.

A Disastrous Appearance.

Kit Goodwin says that he was seized almost to death during his first appearance, and the story that he tells certainly lends color to that assertion.

"On 1870," he said, "I signed for the season to appear in juvenile roles at the Providence Opera House. In a melodrama called 'The Bride,' I was cast for [illegible] who is forcing his unwelcome attention on the girl [illegible] heroine. I thought I was right in it until I made my first speech, and then I discovered my mistake. In the first act I am supposed to suddenly come upon the [illegible] alone, and I deliver this line: 'So, I have you again, my sweet [illegible]! Why do you avoid me thus?' I had not more than delivered that line when the girl turned on me and let out an unearthly screech that scared me to death. It shook every line out of my head, and I stood as if I had been suddenly attacked with lockjaw. The [illegible] was quick to see my plight, however, and she went right on with the play, repeating my lines and then her own. As soon as I saw a chance I made a bolt for the stage door, and with all my makeup on took the next train back to Boston."—New York World.

The Perfect Northern Sea Cow.

In the year 1741 the [illegible] officers discovered gigantic species of cetaceans, or northern sea cows. These enormous manatees were similar in general habits to those of the South American coast and were from [illegible] feet in length and from 30 to 40 feet in girth. They were very stupid, harmless beasts, and lived by browsing on seaweeds and other marine growths near the land. The sailors were not slow in finding out that a sea cow steak beat [illegible] all hollow. From 1741 until 1768 they were the principal food of the sailors and explorers on [illegible] coast. That is not the case, it is not at all surprising that the northern sea cow never a very numerous [illegible] should become extinct in the short space of 14 years. The last of the giant manatees was killed in September, 1768, a few months less than 14 years after the discovery of the first one.—St. Louis Republic.

Two Things That Scare a Negro.

Two seemingly harmless things excite the fear of the southern negro. One is the cracking of the finger joints; the other is to be stepped over as he lies prone upon the ground. The cracking of the finger joints seems to suggest to the superstitious the [illegible] of a skeleton's bones, while to be stepped over is regarded as likely to bring bad luck to grown folks and to check the growth of children. A half grown negro cowboy will sternly command a playfellow who has stepped over his body to step back, in order that the spell may be removed.—New York Sun.

The Customer Ate Crackers.

"Will you please have those biscuits warmed for me?" asked a patron of a Sixth street restaurant of a waiter one night last week. "Very sorry, sir, but the cook is [illegible] a nap, and I'm not allowed to open the oven doors," replied the knight of the tray. "The customer ate crackers.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Texas Building at the Fair.

Chicago, May 9.—Texas expects to be in line with its splendid building and ready for the reception of visitors within the next thirty days. When completed the Lone Star state structure and its inside furnishings will compare favorably with the exhibits offered by any other state. The building would have been completed long ago had it not been for the delay in the granting of the appropriation for pushing the work. President Tolefree of the state commission reached the city a few days ago and has been urging things ahead
